

Positive and negative consequences of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) Appeals: Examining Iceland's controversial advertising campaign.

Judith Fletcher-Brown
University of Portsmouth
Sarah Turnbull
University of Portsmouth
Annamaria Tuan
University of Bologna

Cite as:

Fletcher-Brown Judith, Turnbull Sarah, Tuan Annamaria (2020), Positive and negative consequences of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) Appeals: Examining Iceland's controversial advertising campaign.. Proceedings of the European Marketing Academy, 49th, (63098)

Paper from the 49th Annual EMAC Conference, Budapest, May 26-29, 2020.

Positive and negative consequences of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) Appeals: Examining Iceland's controversial advertising campaign.

Abstract

Brands are increasingly concerned with their impact on society. Communicating this social responsibility has led to the emergence of Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) Appeals. This study explores the positive and negative consequences for brands engaging in CSR appeals. By observing the linguistic style of responses to CSR appeals using an automated text analysis, we examine the negative/positive effect of advertising. The findings provide three main contributions. First, consumers are using more positive than negative emotion in comments. Second, the angry outbursts with offensive language is used in responses. Third, there are three main clusters of comments which differ in their linguistic style. These novel findings provide a greater understanding of how brands are communicating their social responsibility from an advertising perspective.

Keywords: Automated text analysis; Brand Activism; Corporate Social Responsibility Appeals

Track: Advertising & Marketing Communications